Inspire school pupils with your research!

Doctoral students in school – a project in which doctoral students can meet pupils in schools and awaken their interest in social sciences and higher education with their research. Take this opportunity to inspire others!

There are many pupils and teachers in schools who are curious about the subject area you are studying or researching. Lund University and a number of municipalities in northwestern Skåne have therefore entered into a collaboration whereby doctoral students are invited into schools to present their research.

You receive a fee of SEK 1500 on each occasion for your contribution, as well as reimbursement of travel expenses. You also get feedback on your presentation from the school’s educators.

Participation is entirely voluntary but the Faculty of Social Sciences would like to encourage you to take this opportunity to develop your ability to communicate your research while contributing to arousing curiosity about social sciences in school pupils. It is possible to visit classes from pre-school to upper secondary level. When visiting upper secondary school classes (around 16-18 year olds), it is fine to speak English but you need to be Swedish-speaking if you are interested in visiting primary or pre-school classes (around 4-15 year olds).
